

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

In a transistor adapted to suppress characteristic degradation resulting from fluorine contained in a deposited film, the concentration of fluorine contained in a gate insulating film (3) is reduced to 1.0×10^{20} atoms/cm³ or less. As a result, the transistor can provide excellent 5 reliability even when it is continuously driven for a long period of time at a relatively high temperature.